THE PHENIX

7

The all respectful and dignified attitude assumed by the Irish emigration in California is one that the Frenchman envies. It is the only manner of dressing in that city, and those who fail to adopt it are subject to the contempt of their countrymen. The French, on the other hand, are not ashamed of their native land, and they are always ready to defend it when it is attacked. The French have a deep feeling of patriotism, and they are always ready to sacrifice their lives for their country. The Irish, on the other hand, are not always ready to defend their country, and they are often ready to sacrifice their lives for the sake of their own interests.

The attitude of Austria.

It is not difficult for the young visitor to realize the time when Austria was declining in France that she was a formidable power. She was a great power in Europe, and her influence was felt throughout the continent. She was a great power in the arts, and she was a great power in the sciences. She was a great power in the literature, and she was a great power in the music. She was a great power in the military, and she was a great power in the diplomatic.

The Frenchman, however, was not impressed by the power of Austria. He was not impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was not impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was not impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.

The Frenchman was impressed by the power of France. He was impressed by the size of her army, or by the number of her soldiers, or by the strength of her navy. He was impressed by the wealth of her treasury, or by the richness of her industries, or by the splendor of her palaces. He was impressed by the eloquence of her orators, or by the beauty of her poets, or by the greatness of her philosophers.