WASHINGTON: Saturday, April 29, 1826.

vol. xxxi

Mr. Speaker, in explanation of the meaning of the word "envelope," I am desired by the House to inform you, that the expression is used in the sense of an instrument or letter, enclosed in another letter.

President's Message. 18 of April, 1826.

The President's message was read and ordered to lie upon the table.

The House then adjourned to meet Monday next.

Seth H. Weed, Clerk.
The important question now before the Congress is, in what way it shall be explored by the Constitution. It is a question which involves the welfare of the United States, and which must be decided by the people, and it is impossible to say whether the Union of the States in their present condition will ever be brought to a conclusion.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.

The present condition of the United States is such as to require the immediate attention of the national legislature. The Union is in a state of insolvency, and the government is in a state of disorder. The people are discontented, and the country is in danger. It is impossible to say whether the Union will ever be restored to its former condition, or whether it will ever be restored to its former glory.