WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1820.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Gentlemen: — Notwithstanding the paragraphs of the Secretary of War, under the signature of “Military,” in your last number of the National Intelligencer, referring to the time when the military regulations should be revised, and containing an expression of the differences which would occur between the officers, and in the execution of the military law, it is to be regretted that, in pursuance of the communication from War, I have again to inform the public of the existence of the military order, and that the military law is not yet in force, and has been suspended until the next session of Congress.

The military law is suspended, and will be re-enacted at the next session of Congress, and the military regulations will be revised.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the National Intelligencer:

I am induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

I am, therefore, induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

Washington, June 1.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1820.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Gentlemen: — Notwithstanding the paragraphs of the Secretary of War, under the signature of “Military,” in your last number of the National Intelligencer, referring to the time when the military regulations should be revised, and containing an expression of the differences which would occur between the officers, and in the execution of the military law, it is to be regretted that, in pursuance of the communication from War, I have again to inform the public of the existence of the military order, and that the military law is not yet in force, and has been suspended until the next session of Congress.

The military law is suspended, and will be re-enacted at the next session of Congress, and the military regulations will be revised.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the National Intelligencer:

I am induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

I am, therefore, induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

Washington, June 1.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Gentlemen: — Notwithstanding the paragraphs of the Secretary of War, under the signature of “Military,” in your last number of the National Intelligencer, referring to the time when the military regulations should be revised, and containing an expression of the differences which would occur between the officers, and in the execution of the military law, it is to be regretted that, in pursuance of the communication from War, I have again to inform the public of the existence of the military order, and that the military law is not yet in force, and has been suspended until the next session of Congress.

The military law is suspended, and will be re-enacted at the next session of Congress, and the military regulations will be revised.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the National Intelligencer:

I am induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

I am, therefore, induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

Washington, June 1.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Gentlemen: — Notwithstanding the paragraphs of the Secretary of War, under the signature of “Military,” in your last number of the National Intelligencer, referring to the time when the military regulations should be revised, and containing an expression of the differences which would occur between the officers, and in the execution of the military law, it is to be regretted that, in pursuance of the communication from War, I have again to inform the public of the existence of the military order, and that the military law is not yet in force, and has been suspended until the next session of Congress.

The military law is suspended, and will be re-enacted at the next session of Congress, and the military regulations will be revised.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

GEORGE TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the National Intelligencer:

I am induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

I am, therefore, induced to write you this letter, in consequence of the misunderstanding which has arisen between myself and the Secretary of War, and which has been the subject of much discussion in the press. I am persuaded that, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is necessary to make it known to the public that the military law is not yet in force, and that the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

The military law will be in force, and the military regulations will be revised at the next session of Congress.

Washington, June 1.

GEORGE TAYLOR.
WASHINGTON

Thursday, June 1.

By the act of Congress, a portion of the public domain of the United States has been set apart for the use of the Smithsonian Institution, to be located in the District of Columbia. The act provides for the establishment and maintenance of a museum of science and art, and for the support of research and education. The institution shall be governed by an executive council, consisting of three members appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The purpose of the institution shall be to promote the progress of science and the arts, and to increase the knowledge and enjoyment of the public. The act also provides for the establishment of a library and a museum of natural history, and for the support of educational programs and research. The institution shall have power to acquire and hold lands, buildings, and equipment, and to make contracts and engage in any other activity necessary to carry out its purposes. The act further provides for the appointment of a director and other officers, and for the publication of reports and other works.