When we mention, in our last, the visit of the Englishmen to the Missouri boundary, we were not aware of the reception in detail of the whole delegation at Cape Girardeau. The statement we were given was that Mr. Polk's views were received with great cordiality, but it is more social and more extensive to say that the most cordial & hearty reception was given the Missouri delegation by the entire people of Missouri, at Cape Girardeau, in a general meeting held for the purpose of receiving the delegation, and it was the general opinion that the house of representatives in Missouri was more cordial and hearty in its reception of the Missouri delegation than was the house of representatives in New York. So far as we are aware, there are no indications of any change in the attitude of the Missouri delegation towards the Englishmen. The people of Missouri are not aware of any change in the attitude of the Englishmen towards the Missouri delegation. The Missouri delegation is in possession of the Missouri delegation's views and is ready to give them a fair hearing. The Missouri delegation is in possession of the Missouri delegation's views and is ready to give them a fair hearing.
Mr. Palmer's Speech.

It is a subject which I had not expected to be called upon to advert to, but which has been so frequently presented to me, and in which I have been called upon to express my sentiments, that I am induced to avow those sentiments. I have always felt a deep sense of the importance of the subject, and have been conscious of the necessity of throwing every weight into the scale in favor of the cause of truth and justice, and in favor of the principles of free government.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so often brought before the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of triteness. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.

It is a subject which has been so long agitated, and has been so frequently brought before the attention of the public, that it is difficult to speak upon it without being accused of repetition. But I feel that I must speak, and that I must speak with all the force of my convictions, and with all the energy of my convictions, and with all the energy of my understandings, that are at my command.
WASHINGTON.

Thursday, June 29.

The Richmond Enquirer says we are told by several gentlemen from that city that they have seen the daily express from Alexandria to Washington yesterday afternoon, bringing a dispatch from General Jackson, containing information of the capture of the capital by the rebels. The dispatch is as follows:

"General Jackson, June 29.

To General Scott.

Under a flag of truce, I have the honor to inform you that the enemy has taken possession of Richmond. I have destroyed the magazine of powder and ordnance. The enemy are in great force. I have destroyed the magazine of powder and ordnance. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge.

G. B. M."

MARRIED.

On Tuesday evening last, by the Rev. Mr. Peabody, of this city, Mr. William Peabody, of Boston, Mass., and Miss Charlotte Peabody, of the same city, were united in marriage.

A NEW HUMAN SLAUGHTER.

From the Evening Post.

Color Green, King George Castle, Va.

The Evening Post of this city, in a letter from a correspondent in that place, gives an account of a new and bloody massacre by the rebels.

The letter is as follows:

"King George Castle, Va., June 28.

The rebels have been very active in this place, and have been engaged in burning and destroying all public property. They have burned the magazine of powder and ordnance, and have destroyed the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force. I have burned the railroad bridge. The enemy are in great force.

G. B. M."